INTRODUCTION

In 2014 the Australian Nursing and Midwifery Federation (ANMF) established a National Graduate Nurse and Midwife Roundtable which brought together over 30 nursing and midwifery leaders and key industry stakeholders to discuss ways of securing employment opportunities for nursing and midwifery graduates. The Roundtable included representatives of the Council of Chief Nursing and Midwifery Officers, the Nursing and Midwifery Board of Australia, the Council of Deans of Nursing and Midwifery, the Congress of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Nurse and Midwives, the Australian College of Midwives, federal politicians, public sector and aged care employers, nurse educators, a number of professional nursing associations and, of course, new graduates themselves.

All participants agreed there was a significant problem of underemployment of nurse and midwife graduates, the causes of which are complex and varied, and that further work, which focuses on addressing the key causes, was required. Subsequently, a Working Group of interested Roundtable participants was formed to undertake this further work.

One of the key areas of focus for the Working Group has been ensuring the accuracy of data related to graduates, in terms of numbers graduating, numbers registering and numbers then seeking work in nursing and midwifery. After much discussion and review of the current available data, the group developed and agreed on a minimum data set that is required to make informed predictions and outcomes for future graduate employment.

Five main questions were posed, these included:
1. Numbers of nursing and midwifery student commencements per year in a course leading to registration.
2. Numbers of nursing and midwifery course completions per year in a course leading to registration.
3. Number of new graduates registered (initial registration) from Australian Education providers in a one year period (AIHW data regarding first time registrations).
4. Of the new graduates (initial registration) from Australian Universities, how many are employed in nursing and midwifery.
5. Number of graduate transition places.

The ANMF then worked closely with the Department of Education and Training, National Centre for Vocational Education Research and the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) to drill down on the current available data using the agreed minimum data set as a framework. The ANMF sends correspondence on behalf of the Graduate Working Group to Chief Nursing and Midwifery Officers in each state and territory requesting potential transition/graduate positions for nurses and midwives. The following data booklet has been developed and updated from this completed work, to clearly identify what data is available, what remains outstanding and the limitations with some of the available data.

Limitations

The ANMF has some concerns about of the accuracy of data available and presented within the document in terms of providing a complete data set related to graduate nurse and midwife employment. This is primarily due to the ANMF's inability to gain access to some portions of relevant data. These concerns are identified as limitations and notes throughout the document.

Tables 10.1-10.4 Source: NHWDS Nursing and Midwifery, 2013-2023

Not stated/inadequately described includes non-respondents to the survey

For further information on these tables, refer to the 'Notes' sheet

NOTES REGARDING NHWDS DATA:

1. Data extracted from the National Health Workforce Dataset (NHWDS): Nurses and midwives, 2013-2023. Note that the 2013 data was required to derive the 2014 numbers (see Note 2 below).

2. This data is for nurses and midwives that first appeared on the NHWDS database in the reference year (i.e. were not in the NHWDS database in the prior year).

3. The results for new registration are likely to be affected by the timing of graduation, completion of the health workforce survey and recruitment action by significant employers. As a result there are likely to be variations across jurisdictions and years.

4. Any cell containing 5 or less practitioners has been set to 'NP' (not published) for reasons of confidentiality. Consequential cell suppression has been applied to additional cells so that small cell counts cannot be determined.

5. In order to remain consistent with previous AIHW analysis, Enrolled Nurses / Registered Nurses / Midwives are defined using division withing the profession, rather than the respective registration flags.

6. In order to remain consistent with previous AIHW analysis, Indigenous Status Grouped has been used to define Indigenous Status, rather than Australian Born Indigenous Status.

7. In order to remain consistent with previous AIHW analysis, Principal areas are defined based on the nursing job area first, then the midwifery job area, rather than the job area the practitioner spends the most number of hours at.
